Cpl. H. E. Nease Killed On Okinawa Island

Mr. and Mrs. Carl L. Nease, 1612 15th street have received word from the Navy department that their son, Cpl. Howard E. Nease, 21, was killed in action on Okinawa, May 21.

With the Fifth marine division, Corporal Nease had been overseas 29 months. He entered the marines in August 1942 and received training at San Diego, Calif.

Surviving are his parents; three sisters, Edith and Marie Nease, of the home, Mrs. Margaret Greene, Greensboro; and one brother, T. Sgt. Garland E. Nease, with the air corps in Germany.

Service For Yates Infant Is Held Monday

Graveside service for the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Yates, of 1302 Cypress street was held Monday morning at Proximity cemetery, with Rev. R. C. Goforth, pastor of Proximity Methodist church officiating. The infant died Saturday afternoon at St. Leo's hospital.

Survivors in addition to the parents are: the paternal grandfather, Mr. J. M. Yates; the maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Buie, of Franklinville; three brothers, Ronald, Roger and Raymond Yates; and one sister, Judy Yates.

"Y" Traveling Cards Help Away From Home

YMCA membership traveling cards for civilian emergency travel may be secured now at White Oak and Proximity branches of Cone Memorial YMCA. These cards will enable the bearer to enjoy the association privileges in other cities. There is no charge.

Serving as an introduction to the YMCA secretary in another city, these cards enable the member to use shower facilities, swimming pool and reading and social rooms.

For many years, the Y. has been known as the "Home away from Home" for its members, and now, more than ever, its doors are open to traveling visitors of relatives in service.

Persons who are not members are urged by the local association to join as soon as possible.

THIRTY REGISTER FOR SWIM CLASS

Thirty boys between the ages of eight and 12 registered for the Learn-to-Swim class which begins at White Oak Y. Monday afternoon, June 4.

No More Proud Sight

ALL THE WORLD looks to The American Flag as the symbol of freedom from aggression and a guarantee that peace and righteousness shall prevail. This official insignia of the Mighty Seventh War Loan, shows the raising of the flag on Iwo Jima by U. S. Marines. It is the picture that has been more widely used than any in this war, proceeds of which are donated to service relief.

Congress Should Exercise Its Rights

President Truman has asked Congress for certain powers that would permit him to effect reorganizations for the purposes of both economy and greater efficiency. It is generally conceded that there is plenty of room for both greater economy and efficiency in government administration. We are hoping, therefore, that Congress will permit the administration to cut out unnecessary expense, eliminate waste and develop greater efficiency in government operations, provided, however, that the granting of power will not exceed that to which the administration is entitled under the Constitution of the United States.

Furthermore, Congress in its action should be alert to any power granting which will directly or indirectly lead to autocracy in Washington. Only too frequently have concessions been made and powers granted for one purpose, which appeared to be consistent with our democratic principles but which were later used for purposes far removed from the original intentions.

A review of power granting both to the executive branch of the government and to administrations of various government organizations indicates that very frequently such powers have been greatly extended beyond the original intent of Congress and in each case democratic principles have seriously suffered.

It is very difficult for Congress in enacting bills or granting powers to spell out in detail exactly what they mean. Ambitious and overzealous administrators, however, have not been reluctant at all in expanding provisions of Congress, and too frequently courts have upheld them.

In fact, one senator within the past few years remarked that it would probably be wise to put into a certain bill under consideration "We mean it this time" after discovering that an administrator had ignored entirely a certain provision of a previously enacted bill.

Congress is given the right to enact legislation and to preserve for itself certain powers. When Congress enacts a bill or grants some of its powers to others, Congress alone should be able to spell out its intentions both to those who administer the bill and to the Supreme Court of the United States, whose duty it is to see that Congress' rights and intentions are followed.

Unfortunately for a democratic country, our courts have permitted expediency, or what they considered expediency, to govern many of their decisions rather than the facts connected with the issues. We do not mean to state that our courts, and particularly the Supreme Court of the United States, should not have any latitude, but we do state that our courts are not law-making bodies; and, further, that they have no right whatsoever to act contrary to the intention of the law-making bodies when they pass on legislation.

It is our opinion that our President believes in preserving the rights of Congress and does not want to usurp any of Congress' constitutional authority or power. We, therefore, believe that the President's request is one within the bounds of the Constitution insofar as his thoughts are concerned, but it is hoped that Congress will on its own hook very carefully decide just how much power it should give to the Executive and how much it should maintain itself. If requests are made by the President over and above those that properly belong to the executive branch of the government in accordance with our Constitution, then Congress should have veto powers and should exercise them.

MIGHTY SEVENTH WAR LOAN INSIGNIA TO BECOME FIXED CAPITAL SCULPTURE

Washington, D. C., June 7.—The historic raising of the United States Flag on Mt. Suribachi on Iwo Jima by U. S. Marine Corps, the AP photograph of which became the most widely publicized picture of this war and the official insignia of the Mighty Seventh War Loan, is to be made into a stone or bronze statuary to forever remind the nation of the sacrifice made. It will be erected at the Nation's Capital following the war.

Designed by the internationally famous sculptor, Felix G. W. de Weldon, now an enlisted man in the Navy with the rank of Painter Second Class, the pilot model was shown to the three survivors of the historic moment in Washington, one of them an Indian Chief. Ted R. Gamble, national director of the War Finance Division of the Treasury, accompanied the veterans of the Iwo Jima, who are volunteers on behalf of the Mighty Seventh War Loan campaign for 14 billion dollars.

De Weldon was born in Vienna, Austria, April 12, 1907. He studied at the Academy of Art of the University of Vienna, in Paris and Italy and Egypt and Greece, he sculptured King George V and King George VI and the present Duke of Windsor. The King George V bust is on exhibition in London, de Weldon is the only living artist whose work of the King is on exhibition in the London Gallery.

Also completed by de Weldon was the bust of Field Marshal Lord Allenby, among others. De Weldon settled in London in 1933 and a few years later came to the United States.

At the outbreak of the war he laid aside his tools and joined the Seabees, later being transferred to the Navy, where he is assigned to the Bureau of Personnel, Naval Aviation.

The three survivors of the flag raisers are:

Private First Class Ira Hamilton "Chief" Hayes born at Indian agency, Sacaton, Ariz., January 12, 1923. He is the son of Joe E. and Nancy Hayes. He is a Pima Indian. He was moved to Phoenix, Ariz., as a child and educated in Indian schools there. The family later moved to Bapchule, Ariz., where his father is now a farmer. Enlisted Marine Corps in August, 1942, received boot training at San Diego, Calif., and then took Parachute training at Camp Gillespie, Calif. After further training at Camp Pendleton, went overseas with a parachute battalion and fought in the jungles of Bougainville. Hayes, a sharpshooter on the rifle range was trained

Private First Class Rene Arthur Gagnon. He was born in Manchester, N. H., March 7, 1925 and went to grammar school there and completed two years at Central High School, Manchester. He worked in a canning factory and spinning mill before enlisting April 26, 1943. He took boot training at Parris Island, S. C. Stationed as guard at Charleston, S. C. Navy Yard for seven months. Transferred to Camp Pendleton, Calif., as rifleman, joining E Company, 28th Regiment, Fifth Marine Division, March, 1944. At Iwo, assigned as runner from companies to battalion. Carrying battery for walkie-talkie radio to Easy company morning of flag raising. He is only son. Lives at 43 ollis Street, Manchester.

Pharmacist's Mate John Henry Bradley born July 10, 1923, at Antigo, Wis. Moved as boy to Appleton, Wis., where his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James J. Bradley now live at 112 W. 8th Street. After completing Appleton High School in 1941, he became apprentice to a funeral director. Had just completed necessary 18-month's apprenticeship when he enlisted in the Navy, January 13, 1943. He intends to go to school and become funeral director after war. Expressed preference for Navy hospital corps and after boot training at Farragut, Idaho, was assigned to Hospital Corps School there. Then sent to the U. S. Navy hospital at Oakland, Calif. In January, 1944, was assigned to the Fleet Marine Force as a hospital corpsman with the 28th Regiment and went to field medical school—standard training for corpsmen prior to serving with the Marines. He joined the regiment April 15, 1944. Iwo was his first battle. He was with Sergeant Henry O. Hansen, 24, of 39 Madison street, Somerville, another of the Iwo flag-raisers when Hansen was killed in action. Bradley giving blood plasma to Hansen in futile effort to save him when four of the Japs who got Hansen charged from a fox hole a few yards away and rushed for the spot where Bradley was treating the fallen Marine. Other men cut the Japs down. On March 12, a mortar shell landed in Bradley's platoon command post. Fragments hit three men. Bradley was hit in both legs.

American Hearts Failing Says Article

"American hearts are failing," says an article in a National Health magazine. It states also, if the present trend continues, it appears to be inevitable that in a short time more than half the population of this country will succumb to heart disease unless vigorous measures are instituted to combat it.

Eminent heart specialist has attributed the great increase in mortality from this disorder to the use of the automobile instead of walking, the large consumption of alcoholic beverages, the increased use of tobacco, over-eating and the tension of modern life.

Biologic living, which means living in harmony with the laws of nature, offers the best means of reducing the high mortality rate of this killer.

"I have something here," he said to the man of the house, "which will make you popular, make your life happier, and bring you a host of new friends."

"Good," replied Green quickly. "I'll take a quart."

Needs Customer's Help

In announcing the campaign John E. Jaeger of Baltimore, Md., NAR-GUS president, declared:

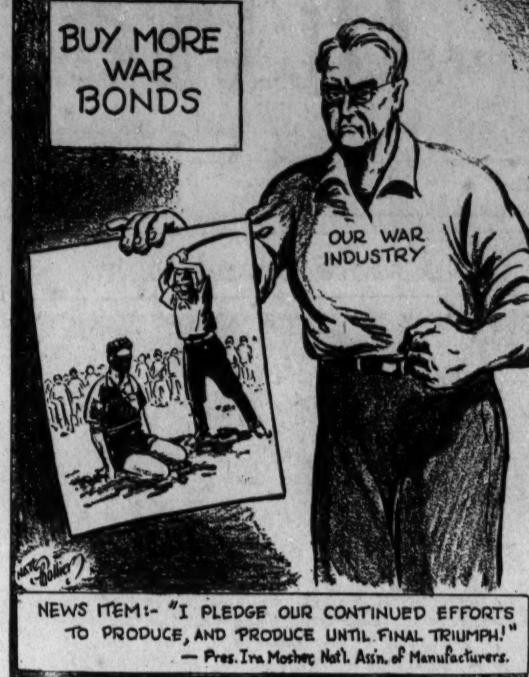

"The retail food merchant needs the help of every one of his customers to make rationing a workable wartime measure. He knows that if our armed forces are to receive the food they need and if every American is to receive his fair share of the remaining food, rationing is a absolute necessity. He knows, too, that in the final analysis it is the consumer in cooperation with the grocer who must see to it that rationing works. He can post price ceilings and mark his ration points carefully on rationed foods, but if the customers ask for ration credit or offer to pay a higher price for something difficult to obtain, it is going to be hard to make thes cimporant wartime controls work."

"The food shortages which exist today coupled with tremendous demand and greater increased ability to pay create a condition which invites black market operations."

Needs Help!

"To prevent growth of that illicit trade, the honest retailer needs the help of the consumer. He urges her to deal only with reputable merchants, to pay only prices at or below the ceiling and to give sufficient ration stamps for every rationed item."

Color In Daily Papers After War

Printing equipment manufacturers, in their rare time off from war work, are planning ways to put color in the daily papers as well as in magazines and Sunday supplements.

The swing to color coincides with a huge backlog of orders for presses and equipment. A Chicago printing press company believes its orders will keep it busy for five years. A New York firm says "approximately $20,000,000 of newspaper and magazine press business is awaiting immediate placement, in addition to a very substantial volume booked for postwar delivery."

Commercial printing shops are expected to spend $62,000,000 on smaller equipment in the first post-war year.

The Country's First "War Loan" Advertisement

ADVERTISEMENT

Lancaster, May 6th, 1755.

NOTICE is hereby given to all who have contracted to send wagons and teams or single horses from York County to the Army at Wills Creek, that David M. Conaway and Michael Schweppe of the said county, Gentlemen, will attend on my behalf at York Town on Friday next, and at Philip Forneys on Saturday, to value or appraise all such wagons, teams and horses, as shall appear at those places on the said days for that purpose; and such as do not appear must be valued at York and Forneys. The wagons that are valued at York and Forneys are to be set out immediately after valuation from thence to Wills Creek, under the Conduct and Direction of Persons I shall appoint for the purpose. The owners or owners of each wagon or set of horses should bring them to the Place of Valuation and deliver to the appraisers, a paper containing a description of their several horses in writing, with their several marks natural and artificial; which paper is to be annexed to the contract. Each wagon should be furnished with a cover, in which the goods laden therein may be kept from damage by the rain, and the health of the drivers preserved, who are to lodge in the wagons. And each cover should be marked with the contractor's name in large characters. Each wagon, and every horse driver, should also be furnished with a hook or sickle, fit to cut long grass that grows in the country beyond the mountains. As all the wagons are obliged to carry a load of oats, or Indian corn, persons who have such grain to dispose of are desired to be cautious how they hinder the King's Service, by demanding an extravagant price on this occasion. B. FRANKLIN.

BEN FRANKLIN, at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, on May 6, 1755, caused to be written what is termed the country's first loan advertisement. Franklin warned his readers against inflationary prices lest they "hinder the King's Service," a lesson still good in the Mighty Seventh War Loan. The document was written in German as well as English. Superimposed on the original are the words used by Franklin. This was a loan of materials and not of dollars.

To the countless other virtues and of the Treasury. Salmon P. Chase, was faced with the necessity of again borrowing from the people for the purpose of financing a war. And again advertising played a large part in the success of such efforts.

Chase was a financier of considerable note. It was at his suggestion that a national banking system was organized. The system secured an immediate market for Government bonds, so it was through this channel that Chase decided to float his war loan issue. He requested the banks to advertise the bonds to the general public.

The advertisements appeared in the daily press, but they were, for the most part, rosters of the officers and statements of condition of the banks with merely one or two lines of small type at the bottom telling of the Government's war bond issue.

The plan, of course, failed.

Secretary Chase's next move was the appointment of W. B. Shattuck, a former Ohio publisher, as a special agent to put over the loan. Shattuck's first efforts were put into in-

Battle-Scarred LST To Exhibit Ship-To-Shore War Equipment

The Navy is going to exhibit ship-to-shore battle equipment aboard a battle-scarred LST for inland Americans whose wartime production has contributed millions of tons of fighting ships to history's greatest battle fleet.

To give war workers and the general public in the Great Lakes, Ohio River and Mississippi regions a close-up view of their Naval forces in action, the Navy at the direction of Fleet Admiral Ernest J. King, USN, Commander-in-Chief and Chief of Naval Operations, is sending the LST-512, invasion-damaged assault ship, through 12,000 miles of inland waters for public demonstrations of amphibious warfare.

The exhibit-packed invasion carrier, salvaged after being crippled in action off Normandy, will cruise midwest waterways in response to constant expressions from workers in centers from Duluth, Minnesota, to New Orleans, La., who want to see the end products of the Navy equipment they have been helping to build for more than four years of war.

The LST-512 and her shipload of timely invasion exhibits will be open to the public in a series of demonstrations entitled "Hit the Beach." The show will have its first D-Day in Detroit, Mich., about Wednesday, June 6, the first anniversary of the Allied assault on Normandy.

The 328-foot tank landing ship will be manned by combat veterans of the Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard. Where suitable beachheads are available along the ship's itinerary, battle-toughened Marine Corps veterans will break out their entire arsenals of weapons for invasion maneuvers of the kind they have perfected through 40 assaults in the Pacific Theater of Operations.

This staff soon began preparing releases of advertising mats for newspapers, which used the ready-made copy in place of, or as a supplement to, the copy they had been publishing.

Some papers published special sections, entirely devoted to the sale of War Bonds. Other media such as magazines, radio and outdoor advertising firms were also supplied with War Bond promotional material by the Bureau of the Budget.

The staff soon began preparing releases of advertising mats for newspapers, which used the ready-made copy in place of, or as a supplement to, the copy they had been publishing.

The loan went over the top. Again advertising, properly initiated and applied, had achieved a success.

This use of advertising by the Government endowed it with a dignity and value it had not previously possessed in the eyes of the public. Attention was focused upon this powerful engine and the coming of peace saw an increase in the use of advertising by legitimate firms—a growth it has since constantly enjoyed.

World War I brought forth another flood of advertising. Billions in Liberty Bonds were sold through its proper use. But the greatest advertising campaign of all was yet to be placed before the American people. It was not until the fateful day of Pearl Harbor that this mightiest of publicity efforts was to be used to bring a way of survival to a successful conclusion.

The events of December 7, 1941, became a fantastic financial burden on the American people. The necessity for increasing taxes and raising additional billions by other methods to pay for the most costly war in world history, became immediately apparent. U. S. Government series "A" bonds that were first issued in 1935 as "Baby Bonds," became War Savings Bonds, and were offered to the American public at large as, not only an investment, but their share in the price of continued freedom.

The public response was immediate, but insufficient to meet the growing needs of a Nation at war, so advertising was again resorted to as a means of speeding up the sale of bonds.

Newspapers and newspaper advertisers alone have contributed advertising valued at $88,482,750 in support of the various War Loan Drives, and the periods between such drives made while others approached local advertisers who, singly and in groups sponsored other pages.

The U. S. Treasury Department had already organized a Defense Savings Staff, which later became the War Finance Division, whose sole duty would be to promote the sale of Defense Bonds.

Following the teachings of an eminent pioneer, Ben Franklin, the American people are not only producing and publishing War Loan advertising at their own expense, but are buying the Bonds too. It always has, and always will be. THE AMERICAN WAY OF LIFE.

For 1945 In Pacific War
More Than $16 Billion

The U. S. Fleet's vast requirements for prosecuting the war against Japan will permit little letup in Navy production during 1945, total procurement for the year reaching an estimate of more than $16,000,000,000.

Production for the Navy is generally being maintained at peak levels, and for the first quarter of this year amounted to $4,100,000,000. The current quarter should set the peak for the year with a slight increase over the first quarter. The accelerated maintenance program has compensated largely for the sharp decrease in expenditures for new construction.

But a great many people were not fooled at all. They had seen bait used to hide hooks before by political as well as practical fishermen. Although the bill stated, right, Section One, that it would be a nice little law if passed and not help any government man, or group of men, grab the schools and run away with them, the statute was ignored by our sage and seasoned Senate.

Amended by Senate
On the floor of the Senate the "federal aid" bill underwent some changes. As changed, none part of the federal funds therein provided nor any part of the local funds thereby supplemented could be used to make or maintain any distinction between races. That's federal control, beyond dispute. I am not discussing the merits of the amendment. I am saying this: Federal control will follow federal aid as night follows day.

The subject is alive again now. A committee in the House and another committee in the Senate are once more considering legislation that flies the flag of "federal aid to education". Once more I am emphasizing that financial aid to local schools from far-away Washington will bring federal control of local schools in spite of all the protective clauses ever built into the law.

It is Federal Law

The Supreme Court of the United States, the most powerful tribunal on this war-torn earth, has established a precedent in favor of federal control. The Supreme Court has ruled that the federal government can control that which it subsidizes. Little, protesting sentence in the preamble of new legislation figuratively fade away in the light of this Supreme Court ruling.

Some people may want to argue that federal aid to schools is not federal subsidy of schools. I maintain that any distinction between the two things is a distinction without a difference. I have learned quite a little about these twin bills recently, and about people who advocate their passage. The bills are practically alike and they point to government control like a compass points to the north.

The Entering Wedge
Both bills call for a 300 million dollar annual outlay of federal funds and it's only a start. Testimony of people who journey to Washington boasting the idea is very clear. It translates the handwriting on the wall. They expect federal aid to grow rapidly after the first bill is passed. I also think it would grow in less than ten years from federal subsidy to federal control.

I am opposed to federal aid therefore for several reasons: (1) It will lead directly to federal control of education. (2) When the national government controls the local schools the children's parents have nothing to say about what takes place at school. (3) If it happens, popular education, so dearly bought, will be nothing but a handy stepping stone toward political dictatorship.

Unchanging Values
in the postwar world

With the end of the war in Germany, plans for rebuilding and reshaping the world to a new and better pattern are being laid. ## "Mujokenkofuku" Means Unconditional Surrender

"If you think from my earlier letters that Japanese is a funny language, take a look at what we've got to jam down Japan's throat!"

So writes a young American, deep in the Pacific phase of the war, in a letter to his father on the eve of the Mighty Seventh War Loan. The father now is engaged in war work on the home front in Washington.

"I wish everyone of us could get to know it," the letter continues. "We're telling it to them with battleships and B-29's that War Bonds are helping to supply. Let's talk to the Japs in another language they understand."

"Mujokenkofuku! Unconditional surrender!"

With the letter comes a chart bearing a set of Japanese characters, which he who runs may read, in Japan. For "security reasons" it is stressed that the identity of neither sender nor receiver of the letter can be divulged but assurance is given that this is no mere Americanized Japanese. The writer of the letter states that the "kanji," as Japanese characters are called in the native tongue, are the work of one of the most noted Japanese calligraphers in that theatre of operations and are considered a beautiful work of art.

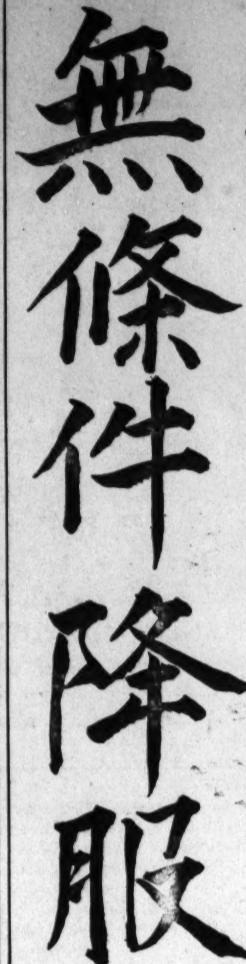

Here is the Japanese:

The follows a translation, character by character, dissecting the thought as it is conveyed to the Japanese reader. One by one from top to bottom the "kanji" mean:

Mu—No
Jo—Item
Ken—Affair or matter
Ko—Fall
Fuku—Submit, obey
There you have it.
"Mujokenkofuku!"
"Fall down obey no say in matter!"
"Unconditional Surrender!"

The writer urged all-out support of the 7th loan to bring Mujokenkofuku that much nearer.

The boy and girl of today can get a better education ten years from now when War Bonds purchased during the Seventh War Loan mature.

The Mighty Seventh War Loan for 14 billion is the home front's way of saying to the men at the front—we're behind you now and in the peace too.

Cartels, The Foe of Enterprise

By J. Howard Pew, President, Sun Oil Company

Through the doors of super-state and government-controlled cartels lies the road that leads to nationalism, isolationism, totalitarianism, and finally, to another disastrous war.

The Anglo-American Oil Agreement provides the framework for restrictions on the production of petroleum and its products, the fixing of prices and the allocation of marketing quotas on recommendation of an International Petroleum Commission. Inherent in the implications of the agreement was the assumption of an obligation by our Federal government, when it concurred in such recommendations, to undertake to carry them out in the domestic field.

This could necessitate the exercise by the Federal government of an authority which it does not now possess under our Constitution, since jurisdiction over natural resources is among the powers reserved to the States in the Tenth Amendment.

Our Constitution makes treaties the supreme law of the land, on a par with the Constitution itself, and overriding other Federal laws, and State Constitutions and laws which may be in conflict with the treaty. Thus the reserved powers of the States would, through treaties dealing with them, fall into the orbit of Federal authority and jurisdiction.

As a matter of fact, such a procedure is the only lawful way, since the NRA was declared unconstitutional, to cartelize effectively the American petroleum industry. Even were private cartels lawful, there are too many enterprises within the industry for any master plan to embrace all of them.

Those outside of the cartel arrangement in a reasonably short time would succeed in defeating the conspiracy. To make a petroleum cartel effective here it must necessarily be implemented by the lash of governmental authority. What is more, the petroleum industry, by and large, wants no part of cartel action, since its growth has resulted from spirited competition. Here we had the amazing spectacle of the administrative agencies seeking to force an industry into a super-state cartel against its wishes.

Danger Threatening All

Throughout the controversy over the oil agreement, it was difficult to avoid the conclusion that those who had proposed it were desirous of taking a short cut designed to change our American system over night to the status of the German system of national socialism. Just remember that the advocates of Socialism long have proposed the promotion of cartels in the conviction that a system of extensive monopolies controlled by the State paved the way for a socialist economy. The Fascists and Nazis seized upon existed cartel systems for the foundation of their totalitarian states. For those reasons I believe the super-state cartel is far more reprehensible and detrimental to the public welfare than private cartels entered into by individual companies, bad as they are.

Much of what I have set forth specifically in regard to the oil treaty, would be applicable to similar undertakings affecting other industries. This use of the treaty-making power to

Cites Harvard Authority
Professor Anton de Haas of the Harvard Business School in a recent defense of cartels distributed, ironically, by an organization calling itself "American Enterprise Assn.," cites all of these justifications for cartels. He also attributes to the cartel the virtue of providing "equality of opportunity". This phrase contradicts itself. Since all men differ in talent, initiative and industry, creation of "equality of opportunity" would shut the door of opportunity for the efficient, and drag them down to the level of the inefficient.

Much written in defense of cartels makes little sense to me. We find, for instance, Milo Perkins, former executive director of the Economic Warfare Board, concluding a recent magazine article with the assertion that: "Where we cannot eliminate cartels, we must gradually perfect ways to make them into instruments which serve the public interest." But at the beginning of the article, emphasized by italic type, Mr. Perkins states: "All cartels are in business to keep prices at levels which could not be held if free competition existed." In other words, Mr. Perkins in one breath asserts cartels are devices for robbing the public, and in the next breath that such devices can be made to serve the public interest.

Another group asserts that, although in normal times cartels may be undesirable they are necessary devices for short terms in periods of depression to prevent the too precipitous drop in price levels, which have disastrous consequences. I suppose that here and there a showing of facts could be made to sustain that conclusion. But it also could be demonstrated that the operation of cartels creates depressions and prolongs them. The danger in resorting to cartels during emergencies is that the cartel survives after the real emergency has passed.

Aside from all of that, however, it is significant this argument is put forth at this time by the cartel advocates. This country does not face a postwar depression. This approach to postwar problems is illustrative of the defeatist attitude marking the economic thinking in Washington during the last twelve years. Too much Washington planning is being done under the shadows of the past. These planners should approach the problem in a venturesome spirit, determined to seize upon the great opportunity presented for a dynamic expanding economy, the only hope for the restoration of full employment in this country.

Cartels Aided Hitler

Some argue that American participation in super-state cartels is necessary to assure lasting peace. I remind them it was cartels, subsidies, unduly high tariffs, bartering and government trading with other governments, which generated so much of the economic friction preceding this war. The cartel idea had its origin in Germany. When Adolf Hitler seized power he found in the cartel system a completely forged weapon for his program of armament and war.

This peace argument is based upon a corollary contention that they are necessary to expand world trade. Actually cartels operate to contract world trade. At best, they might serve to transfer assets from one nation to another without increasing the total of world trade. But if the ills of the world are to be healed through international trade, then the volume of international trade must be expanded. New consumer markets must be created and this can be done only through the production of better goods for sale at lower prices.

A healthy foreign trade is essential to our well-being as well as that of the rest of the world. Our government should be vigilant in opening and preserving trade opportunities abroad for American business and every effort, compatible with our national interest, should be made to expand world trade. Our volume of world trade, proportionately small as it has been, is of great importance to our economic life. But this foreign trade is not worth the price, if that price is abandonment of our competitive enterprise system and placing our domestic economy in a totalitarian strait-jacket.

Finally we hear it said our participation in super-state cartels is inevitable. The argument goes that most of the world has embraced cartels and there is nothing that we can do about it. Thus, we are urged to climb aboard the cartel bandwagon, even though it means the destruction of a system at home which has given our people the highest standard of living ever achieved anywhere at any time upon this earth.

As Friedrich Hayek wrote in his excellent book, "The Road to Serfdom," nothing in social evolution is inevitable unless thinking makes it so. Who can be certain that other nations will remain wedded to the cartel system? Events in Europe have not progressed far enough to indicate definitely the political and economic desires of the people upon the European continent. Nor are the English united in support of cartels. Only last week Prime Minister Winston Churchill called upon the Conservative Party to make private enterprise versus collectivization and liberty versus controls the issues of the forthcoming elections. The London Economist weekly thus urges that cartels and other forms of collectivism are wiser than the wisps leading Britain to disaster.

Leadership For Enterprise

Assume that we must live in a world which outside our borders is wedded to the cartel system. Then we should use our great economic power to give world leadership and direction toward a more universal adoption of the competitive enterprise system. For instance, when the war in Europe ended, there are billions of dollars of lend-lease material that can be converted to peaceful industrial use—perhaps as much as 30 billions worth. In disposing of that surplus material in the countries in which it is stored, let us attach a condition that none of it may be sold or given to any enterprise that is a party to any cartel arrangement. There have been suggestions in Congress that the surplus war material in this country should not be sold to monopolistic enterprises. There is no reason for any less exclusive requirement for the disposal of surplus material abroad.

Again, why should not Congress enact legislation making it unlawful for America to lend money to foreign enterprises participating in cartel arrangements. Such action would apply to foreign loans the prudence and common sense exercised at home by

THIS BUSINESS OF LIVING

BY SUSAN THAYER

Someone said the other day that full employment must begin in the community. I'd go further and say it must begin in the individual.

This makes me think of Emeline, who has never been "employed" in her life. She would never be unemployed if she needed a job, because she goes around doing the things she sees that need doing.

Our in the country Emeline discovered an old lady making some particularly enchanting aprons. Carrying some samples to town, she got an order from a store for three dozen. From that beginning has grown a profitable handicraft business—profitable to both Emeline and a lot of people in that small town where it started. "I've seen an operation paid for, false teeth bought, a mortgage paid off," she told me.

Emeline saw a need for an anthology of children's poetry. She got one together and got it published. Her cook had a collection of very special recipes. Emeline wrote a forward and found a publisher for a cookbook, with royalties to the author, of course.

The projects she has up her sleeve take my breath away. And what a wonderful time she has, too!

Don't think all jobs come out of an employment office. They come from being alert, seeing a need, and doing something about it.

Shift Of Our Full Power To The Pacific Involves Many Supply Problems

"Supplying an army is like a bucket brigade putting out a fire," declared General Breton Somervell, Commanding General, Army Service Forces in a recent conference on the shift of the war to the Pacific. "The longer the distance is between the fire and the water," he continued, "the greater the percentage of men passing buckets, the fewer men actually pouring water on the fire. Thus, a larger percentage of service troops—bucket brigades—is required in a campaign four thousand miles from home than would be needed in a battle near our own coast. In the European theater, one supply soldier served two and a half combat men. In the combat areas in the distant Pacific, the ration is one supply man for each man and a half on the front. Scattered behind him, all the way back to the arsenals on the American continent, several dozen other supply soldiers are passing along the buckets.

"England only 3,000 miles from the United States and 30 miles from the continent of Europe, Manila is 6,200 miles from San Francisco and 13 to 14,000 miles from the major European ports. Instead of being 30 miles from the shores of the Japanese Islands, Manila is 1,700 miles from Tokyo. It took us two years to put a million and a half men in the United Kingdom before D-Day. That was a record of which we may all be proud, but being Americans you and we alike would be sorely disappointed if it took us two years more to prepare for the invasion of Japan.

"In England we had every advantage that a civilized and hospitably could offer. Transportation facilities, excellent harbors, communications systems, all ready made and a great deal of the shelter for our troops ready built. There was a good water supply, sanitation facilities, and a healthful climate not unlike our own. In Manila, there are only a handful of houses left standing; there are 500 boats sunk in the harbor; there isn't an undamaged dock or crane; the only electrical supply comes from a small power plant amid the wreckage of a brewery; the climate is tropical and practically everything that our Army will need must be built from scratch. In England, and on the continent our men needed only woolen clothing. In our Philippines staging areas, our men will need cotton clothing for the tropics, but climate of many parts of the Japanese Islands is far more bitter than that of a good part of Europe. Much of the equipment that we will use in the Pacific war, and practically all of the men, will have to go from Europe rather than the United States.

"One of the most discouraging factors in our Pacific War—and one that requires the manufacture and transportation of thousands of tons of extra equipment—is the necessity for constant "roll up" and abandonment of rear area bases. These represent, besides loss of material, an irrevocable loss in terms of the effort involved in the construction of piers, warehouses, roads, and other installations. New forward bases must be constantly built at tremendous cost of labor, materials and shipping. Scores of harbors and island areas capable of supporting the military effort of the millions of men and huge amounts of material that will be deployed against Japan remain to be developed . . .

"It pretty much boils down to this: In the Pacific War we'll only have what we build ourselves. We'll literally have to make our way as we go and bring along everything we need."

By cutting down on the weight foundations which are required to support the use of aluminum instead of steel girders would permit the erection of taller buildings, according to Reynolds Research. New aluminum alloys, such as R-301, are as strong as structural steel. They are also corrosion-resistant.

About a million men in service want to go into business for themselves.

These peppy fellers will give jobs to several million buddies. And other service men will take jobs in other businesses.

Nearly all of our ex-service men will thus depend on the prosperity of businesses for their prosperity.

Therefore, I hope that the fatso folks have had of scoffing at business and wanting to soak business with destructive taxes and bureaucratic crackdowns will soon go out of style. Anybody with the guts and ambition to start or run a business should be stimulated—not pestered.

The Diary Of A Fighting Ship

vivid as this account, like a diary penned by a Joseph Conrad, from the log of the "General Fleischer", one of the many Norwegian vessels whose brave crews are adding so much toward bringing about ultimate victory for the Allied nations. Describing two attacks by the Japanese, the log reads:

"November 12, 1944—Anchored off Duglag Beach. Alarm sounded at 7:00 A.M. At 5:30 the ship was attacked by Japanese suicide planes. 5:42: An enemy plane dove at us from the stern: we immediately opened fire with our three-inch stern cannon. The plane broke its course and swerved off our port side where it ran into the fire from our 20 mm. cannons, absorbing several hits. The pilot then tried to crash on our foredeck, but the plane already was out of control, and plunged into the sea some fifteen or twenty feet from our bow. Nearly every machine gun on board was aimed at the plane as it dove toward us, and as it exploded, bits of shrapnel and explosives rained down on our foredeck. The deck and deckhouses were damaged, and two of the crew were wounded.

"November 19, 1944—Anchored off Tacloban Beach. Alarm sounded at 7:08 A.M. About 7:10, three Zero pursuits were observed coming in fast from the stern. Two of them dove on two other ships which were anchored beside us, while the third came at us from stern ad starboard. All cannons opened fire. The plane, though hit and in flames, continued its dive in an attempt to land on our foredeck. At this point its starboard wing collided with our port king-post near the third hold, covering our deck with large pieces of the shattered wing. The plane washed into the water very close to the side of the ship, a bit ahead of the first hold. As it hit the water, its bombs exploded with a terrific roar, and flames shot high in the air. We thought for a moment that we were afire (ship's cargo, high octane), but though the ship was violently shaken, and a perfect cascade of shrapnel rain designed to deliver parts needed to convert certain bombers into hospital

evacuation ships. The engineering department drew plans at once but to complete production of the desired part ordered a special rubber only obtainable from Sponge Rubber company of Derby, Conn., had to be procured.

Shipment via air express arrived in 19 hours and the parts rolled off the assembly lines on schedule.

Points On Rationing

GASOLINE

No. 15 coupons in the new A book are good for four gallons each. The mileage rationing record must be presented with your request for renewal, also date of renewal. B-8 and C-8 coupons are valid as of June 1.

TIRES

The number of passenger tires we rationed in May was the smallest number in 12 months. We urged everyone to have his tires checked, recapped and repaired when needed. Passenger tires are divided into four groups—1, 2, 3, 4—according to their preference rating. The type of gasoline ration issued for supplemental mileage such as B or C book does not affect the rating for the vehicle on the preference list.

FUEL OIL

A kerosene ration may be issued for an oil cook stove for the summer months although you have a wood or coal stove. The ration will be from

May 1 to September 30, 1945, and is of renewable.

STOVES

Only oil and gas heating and cooking stoves are now rationed.

SUGAR

Sugar stamp No. 35, now valid, expired June 2. Sugar stamp No. 36, now valid for five pounds through August 31 to consumers. Sugar applications are available at local office.

MEATS AND FATS

Y5, Z5, A2, B2, C2, and D2 now valid expired June 2. E2, F2, G2, H2, and J2 no valid will expire June 30. K2, L2, M2, N2 and P2 now valid will expire July 31. Q2, R2, S2, T2 and U2 now valid will expire August 31. Red stamps will be validated in blocks of five, making a total of 50 points for meats and fats.

PROCESSED FOODS

Attendance Report

Do you ever wonder why we do the things we do? Learned psychologists have tried to answer that question for many years. Before them "philosophers" wrote about it. If you think you know the answers, try to explain this:

Revolution mill had more people on their jobs the week of April 2 than any other week in 1945 with 89.3 percent attendance. Print Works hit a top of 95.6 percent the week of May sixth. Proximity did its best for the year the week of March 18 with 88.6 percent, while White Oak has not yet equaled the 86.8 percent made the week of January seventh.

The week of May 27 both Proximity Mill and Print Works hit lows for the year (listed below,) with Print Works below 90 percent attendance for the first time in over a year. Revolution's lowest week was March 25 and White Oak's was March 18, while Proximity was making its best record. Lowes taverage attendance for all mills is the week listed below with 87.1 percent. The highest average per centage, 89.5 percent, for all four mills was reached twice April 29 and February 25.

If we can't explain these variations, we should at least be able to forecast how great the attendance between now and the first week in July. We all need that cash for our vacations and the best way to get it is to stick to our jobs.

ceilings. Call the price department at the rationing board if in doubt about the correct prices.

Pacific Air War Ups Gasoline Requirements

"For many months now, scarcely a day has passed without our B-29's making their appearance over the Japanese homeland. The men in those airplanes know what their job is," said General of the Army, H. H. Arnold, Commanding General, Army Air Forces in his Victory in Europe Day statement. "Japanese industry will have to be battered into the same chaos that engulfed Germany's military machine. . . . Together with the Royal Air Force, we disrupted the entire German war economy. We forced them on the defensive and gave an airtight cover to our invasion on D-Day. When the time came, we paralyzed their transportation system to the point where the German ground forces were unable to execute the most desperately needed maneuvers. Air power was our margin of victory. And the thing to remember is that to give us this all-important margin, tens of thousands of the finest men who ever lived lie in nameless graves scattered everywhere."

"Daily our airmen return to their work at the risk of death and of capture by the Japanese. They have read the details of the Death March on Bataan as closely as you have. They know what and whom they are up against. And yet, they return to their targets day after day—night after night—simply because they know that it must be done. Remember these men on this day of victory and in the days to come until final victory is won. Remember that although a great battle has been won, their war—your war—goes on."

As the Air War shifts to the Pacific Ocean Area, larger formations of super-fortresses will darken the skies over Tokyo. Super-fortress crews fly missions that range from 12 to 18 hours and bomb from altitudes of a few thousand feet above the streets of Tokyo, Nagoya and other Japanese industrial centers, to the lower reaches of the sub-stratosphere. On occasions, fast, high altitude makes the gasoline consumption of a bomb-heavy B-29 as high as 1,000 gallons per hour. The round trip from American air bases in the Marianas to Tokyo and back requires approximately 6,000 gallons of gasoline per aircraft. The contents of seventy-five 10,000-gallon railroad tank cars are required to service a fleet of 125 superforts for one such raid on the capital of the Japanese Empire.

The four engines of a B-29 in taking off consume 90 gallons of aviation high octane gasoline. In these few minutes a super-fortress consumes an "A" book holder's six-months' supply of gasoline, equal to the distance of 1,350 miles that his car could have traveled. Production and transportation of gasoline and planes must not be hindered by any let-up in the concentrated efforts of military and civilian personnel if super-fortress air fleets are to wage a successful campaign against our remaining enemy—the Japs.

The first two servants, by using their talents, doubled them. The last man was afraid to make his own attempt, and he buried his thus wasting both the money and his ability. To the first two men, greater responsibility is given.

Recently the Japs lost 100 planes a week in three consecutive weeks due to attacks by B-29's in support of the Okinawa operation. At the rate of one strike every 36 hours, Major General Curtis E. LeMay's XXI Bomber Command has mounted large scale attacks upon airfields on Kyushu and Shikoku Islands and in addition to

Free Enterprise

Reprint Of An Editorial By Henry Liefert

Every mother has had the experience of sitting down to help her small son with his school work, and discovering that she herself may learn a number of new lessons from him. In any discussion of free enterprise, I am in the position of that schoolboy. I am no expert, but I do know a few fundamentals which I would like to share with you.

The word "free" is fairly well understood by Americans. Being free is being exempt from undue control, being independent of an arbitrary external power. We all know that freedom is a privilege. Do we realize, though, that it is also a responsibility?

We are free, for instance, to earn, purchase, and own a car, but we must also assume all responsibility for its upkeep and proper use. We may not run people down, travel beyond the speed limits devised for general safety, or drive through somebody's store front. Freedom, if improperly used, without regard for the rights of others, becomes license. The literal meaning of "enterprise" is venture, attempt, undertaking. Actually, the word enterprise implies an effort of a daring nature, a step involving, among other things, courage and energy, ambition, ingenuity, activity, faith.

Freedom of enterprise, therefore, grants you the right to engage in your individual venture, to make your individual effort, without subjection to another human being or groups of human beings. Unfortunately for some people, free enterprise has come to mean ruthlessness in business, dog-eat-dog methods, and cutthroat competition. These people are abusing the principles of free enterprise, causing many other people to condemn it. This is simply a misinterpretation by a class of people who lack understanding. Ignorance of the principles of free enterprise is no excuse for opposition to it. Too many people are passing judgment who know nothing about the subject.

A Parable of Free Enterprise

The system of free enterprise is one of the seeds from which these United States of America grew. Under this system we have, as a nation, gone farther, economically, commercially, politically, and spiritually, than any other nation, and traveled the distance faster. It also is the seed of future growth for our country. It is the great equalizer, doing away with foreign class distinction, giving to every American the same opportunity for growth. Bill Smith, Abe Cohen, and Mike Kelly may all become millionaires, and associate with other millionaires—if they wish to!

The system of free enterprise is embodied in the Constitution of the United States, which puts upon us the responsibility of freedom, then gives us the privilege of using our physical, mental, and spiritual resources to find our individual way of life. But free enterprise goes back a good deal farther than our Constitution. You will find it expounded in The New Testament, in The Master's parable of the talents.

You remember the man "traveling into a far country, who called his own servants and delivered unto them his goods." To one, he gave the responsibility of five talents; to another two talents; to another, one talent. He did not tell his servants precisely how to discharge the responsibility of using their talents. They were free to exercise their powers in their own way.

The first two servants, by using their talents, doubled them. The last man was afraid to make his own attempt, and he buried his thus wasting both the money and his ability. To the first two men, greater responsibility is given.

miles from home, at a moment's notice, and ordered to leave your family behind.

You may not own any private property without permission of the government. Your time and activities are scheduled for you; your food, clothing, shelter, education, are all rationed to you. You cannot improve your living conditions, study for a profession, or even try to enable yourself spiritually, unless the official stamp is put upon you. If you did give up your job without permission, you would be shot or imprisoned. If you criticized your boss, which is the government, you'd meet the same fate.

It is scarcely necessary to point out how different our way of life is; how great the benefits to the individual under our system. One of those benefits is the inalienable right to own property. Here's an illustration.

You want a vacuum cleaner. You may save your money to buy it from household expenses, earn the money by working, get it as a gift from your husband, or even win it as a prize. The cleaner belongs to you. The government cannot tell you that. Mrs. Jones around the corner is to have the cleaner twice a week from two to four o'clock. If you wish to, you may lend it to Mrs. Jones. You may exchange it, give it away, or even rent it out by the hour. The system of free enterprise gives you the right to obtain that vacuum cleaner, the responsibility of owning it, the privilege of using it in any way you see fit.

There's more to this matter, of course, and I'm still the schoolboy. Let's talk about free enterprise again in the future.
